Addressing Problem Behavior in Schools: Part I - Problem Behavior (3 Part Series)

This is the first course in a three-part series on Functional Behavioral Assessment, and contains an introduction to Functional Behavioral Assessments. This course focuses on the requirements specified in the 1997 Amendments to the IDEA that pertain to Functional Behavioral Assessments (FBAs) and positive behavioral intervention plans and supports as they relate to the responsibilities of the Individual Education Plan (IEP) team and to the IEP itself.

Addressing Problem Behavior in Schools: Part II - Conducting a Functional Assessment (3 Part Series)

This is the second course in a three-part series on Functional Behavioral Assessment, and explains in detail the process of conducting a Functional Behavioral Assessment. This course examines the rationale for and discusses the process of conducting a functional behavioral assessment and describes the ways schools and Individual Education Plan (IEP) teams can translate this new public policy into classroom practice by means of a step-by-step approach to functional behavioral assessment. This course explains how IEP teams can decide how to collect various kinds of information and how to organize and analyze this information.

Addressing Problem Behavior in Schools: Part III - Creating a Positive Support Plan (3 Part Series)

This course is the third in a three-part series on Functional Behavioral Assessment, and explores the process of developing, implementing, and monitoring Functional Behavioral Assessments. Today, educators at all grade levels face a growing number of students whose behavior challenges the success of daily classroom instruction. Fortunately, teachers are usually able to rely on standard strategies for addressing classroom misbehavior, such as solid teaching practices, clear rules and expectations, being physically close to their students, and praising and encouraging positive behaviors. Either independently or with the support of colleagues, they are able to find a successful solution to the problem. However, for some students -- both with and without disabilities -- these tactics fail to produce the desired outcome and may actually worsen an already difficult situation.

Advanced PRT: Improving Social Interactions among Children with Autism and their Peers through Pivotal Response Treatment

This course is designed to expand upon the skills of interventionists already familiar with Pivotal Response Treatment. Specific Pivotal Response Treatments are reviewed that focus on teaching joint attention and play skills, as well as expanding self initiations in children with autism such as learning to ask questions (e.g., what, where, and who) and making requests to participate with their peers (e.g., cooperative arrangements). Interventionists will find this course particularly helpful for facilitating interactions in social routines within home, community, and school settings to better support children with autism.

Behavior Assessment Report and Intervention Plan

When a person has major behavior problems, it is not only helpful but also necessary to address them through the process of a formal Behavior Assessment and Intervention Plan, as outlined in this course. These plans take a great deal of staff time to research, conceptualize and write. In the long run they can lead to solutions to these problems in efficient and effective ways. This course will look at how the information is collected for a behavioral assessment, and how the program should be implemented to best support an individual.

Data Collection

Challenging behavior is the one thing that continues to consume our time, resources and emotion in the work we do. The more efficient we become at supporting people to change their behavior, the closer we get to achieving the outcomes we strive toward. Understanding whether our efforts to support behavior change are working, is the foundation of any effective behavior support plan. To know this....we need data! Data Collection is a "quick course" of study in why we need to collect data and covers the fundamentals of how to do so. This includes graphing and how to ensure the data you collect is reliable.

Dual Diagnosis - Developmental Disability and Mental Illness (New Zealand Only)

Perhaps the most challenging clinical aspect of providing mental health care to people with developmental disabilities is the diagnostic assessment of psychiatric disorders. Although it has been reported that persons with developmental disabilities experience the full range of psychiatric disorders, at rates higher than the general population, many mental disorders, for various reasons, are misdiagnosed, under-diagnosed, or undiagnosed in this population. The degree of accuracy of diagnostic assessment with this population is critical to best practice as it provides the foundation for treatment and service planning. This course will explore Dual Diagnosis and possible treatment processes for people with dual diagnoses, and recommendations for providing Dual Diagnosis services.

Law and Ethics

Legal and ethical matters are of concern in almost every profession, especially in the field of mental health. Marriage and Family Therapists (MFTs) will often encounter clients and situations where ethical and legal issues are intertwined with the mental health issues that are at hand. Because of this, it is imperative that the MFT have a good understanding of their legal and ethical responsibilities and rights when working with clients.

While many of the legal considerations of the field are governed by national law, in addition each state and licensing board will have their own laws and standards. This course provides a general overview of laws and standards in place in California. If practicing in another state, it will be imperative for you to know and understand those laws and standard which are specific to that state in which you are practicing.
